

Where's that again?

Canadian comedian Tom Green just garnered himself an invitation to a bustling metropolis situated somewhere between Moose Jaw, Sask., and Medicine Hat, Alta — give or take a couple provinces.

During a skit for Jay Leno's Tonight Show filmed Feb. 18, one of Canada's most notorious exports visited B.C. Canada Place in Turin, Italy.

It's not known when the piece will air.

"They built a log cabin in a place called 100 Mile House, between Moose Jaw and Medicine Hat," quipped Green.

That comic-gem was followed up by him asking if the building donated to Turin post-Olympics would eventually be torn down for firewood.

Although the old saying, "no publicity is bad publicity," is true, Green should make his way to 100 Mile House, Mayor Donna Barnett said.

"It's great if he wants to mention it," she said. "But, I would like to publicly invite him up here so we can show him where we are, how beautiful the Cariboo region of B.C. is. We'll show him where the best product in the world is made and where the best people are."
